The youngsters of the Cotton States the futura. As soon as they get their new machinery under way, the millennium is to come. They flatter themselves that they have made great improvements on the work of their fathere, in fixing up their new Constitution. They only have a Presidential be harraseed so often with an exclting politi eal canvass. It ought to have occurred to them that a President for life would have an wered the purpose better, if they desired to get rid of exciting elections. We suggest this improvement to the next Federal Convention, and are not sure it will not be adopted.

We have frequently heard the suggestion that the Presidential term should be extended to avoid excitement recurring at such short intervals. It should occur to any one that the longer the term the greater excite ment at an election. If a President held office only two years, instead of four, a struggle for the office would be comparatively trifling. Four years interest in office and patronaga wakee up the energy and ambition of the country, that half the time would not enlist. Reduce the time to one year, and the election of a President would be a very insignificant affair.

On the other hand, extend the term to ten years, and we could hardly escape revolu-The venerable patriots who framed cur

Is not unlikely that if they had fixed six, or This is the eight, or ten years, the Government would have broken up before 1861. It would not have lived three score and ten years. So auch for this point, on which the boys think they have made an improvement. If hey had shortened the term to two years, instead of extending it to six, there would have been more philosophy in their policy.

Then they have been disgusted with the patronage of the President, arising from his power to remove officers at discretion, and appoint his friends. They have given the power to change Cabinet officers and foreign ninisters, but not others, without cause. They have thus made a fine opening for life officee. Why should a man have or keep an office, ie a Democratic or Republican queslon. Why should ha lose it, is very appropriate in a monarchy. Perhaps Cottonoo
